Dear Mr. Watkins:

We find your script entirely offensive, unrealistic and in poor taste to our boys fighting overseas.

When someone is trying to kill you, you must kill them. It's ancient law. The notion that it is better to wait out situations, use non-lethal force, or take cover is cowardly and dangerous.

Bad people need killing—and that right quick.

My grandpappy used to tell us of the war days in the south. What some call the Civil Rights Movement, we always called the second Civil War, and this one goes on today.

Some might say it is the ultimate judgement to kill someone, and that judgment is God's. Well, I tell them my gun is my god, and that they better not move too quick or I'll plug them chalk full a' God all over my porch.

I'm a God-fearing Christian man, don't get me wrong² and I go to church every second Holiday. Folks see me pray, I have witnesses... But that's not my point.

My point is, Mr. Watkins, that you have written a script that will make guns and shooters of them look slightly right of dumb—and I resent it, my gun resents it—and God vis a vie my god which is my Gun resents it as well.

Capisce???

Don't write anymore. Don't publish or sell your work, for if you do—you will be on my list.³

That being said, I love you as a Christian, and Marge my wife has sent along with this letter jamcakes from the warmness of her heart.⁴

Hope you chok—I mean check out our website on new NRA education programs coming to your neighborhood.

Aim for the chest.
